ington the aerolite presented a disk three times the apparent size of a full moon. At all places reported from, the roar caused by the passage of this great mass of matter through this dense atmosphere of the earth was alarmingly audible and the tremendous friction to which the surface parts were subjected caused continuous superficial disintegration, with accompanying explosions, filling the air with multifarious points of light, tinged with every hue, and presenting a very beautiful phenomenon. At Mendota and Garrett, in Illinois, the inhabitants were mystified by a sudden illumination of the atmosphere, accompanied, in the latter place, by a detonation louder and sharper than an ordinary cannon. In neither of these places was the meteor visible, which would show (as their zenith was the most highly illuminated) that the stranger's altitude was still above the prevailing clouds, and its momentum sufficient to carry it perhaps across the continent, although, suffering a constant deterioration in size, it would attract far less attention from the denizens of the Eastern States.
